Animals in Entertainment Circuses

Every child looks forward to the time of year when the circus is in town, but as the entertainment really works the price the animals have to pay? In order for the show to go on, wild animals must be trained to perform unusual tricks. The training involves using whips, restraints, fear, intimidation and other devices to force the animals to overcome the wild. But is it worth it? Some may argue that the devices are too harsh for the animal because there is no evidence. However, the animals may have gone through treatment to reduce and change the signs, such things include vaccinations, tranquilizers, sedatives, and/or prophylactic antibiotics. In addition, caregivers can be professional to control, restrain and to keep an animal the behavior a certain way. For example, limitation of studies and hyperactivity of animals occurs even though there is no scientific reason for it. Such animals are restrained and used to be there in a wild animal park to supply entertainment for the public. Furthermore, wild animals are kept in small steel cages, boxes, and chains for most of their lives. In the wild, elephants walk up to 20 miles a day and roam with small herds which performing elephants is kept in a tightly closed cage standing from city to city. Also, arthritis and severe foot infections are common in elephants in the circus and in the breeding pens of herds of elephants in captivity. The United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) reports animals that have been diagnosed with such, head, and health being conditions. Such reports have been reported at Carson and Hagen/Circus as well as Cole Brothers Circus. In fact, the Cole Brothers should qualify as violating the Endangered Species Act by illegally selling two Asian elephants for the use of private parties and elephant rides.

Although circuses have infinite amount of uses, several jobs come to mind. For example, to provide the public with entertainment and to show to our little animals up close and personal. The circus gives the opportunity to show children and adults how extraordinary animals can be, give the show that comes with it. In addition, performing herds have a longer lifespan than herds that compare to herds. For instance, circuses tend to keep the animals as long as possible to avoid teaching the tricks to new animals, whereas some herds enter early and more likely are euthanized. Circuses also provide jobs to people, such as, circus animal owners, and workers. Domesticated animals such as dogs are often performing but there is no evidence to prove it.

In my opinion, exotic animals should not be forced to perform unless for human amusement. The cruel and dehuman techniques used on the animals are nothing more than making hundreds of my kind should not be chained up and kept in a cage so small for comfort. Exotic animals, such as elephants, tigers, and bears should have space to use and live an ordinary, healthy life. In addition, the events that occur during a performance teach children nothing about the natural behavior or habits of the animals used, except the fact that animals
