"Sticks of a bundle are unbreakable"

I come from a family that never had much money, but we have always been rich. Through the eyes of society we have little. Over the course of our lives the wind has always blown against us: poverty has been our neighbor, and we have been faced with multiple evictions, days without food, times without a vehicle, and constant struggle. I have learned that adversity and hardship are inevitable, but I call my family rich because we value a treasure that not many people have the privilege of claiming they still bear these days, each other. I have discovered that when stumbling upon trials and tribulations many families fall apart, believing that giving up will alleviate their struggle. My family, however, has always advocated the idea that sticks of a bundle are unbreakable.

Just before my adolescence my father lost his job, leaving our living situation a game of musical chairs. Since then we have migrated like birds. Every year the six of us Nazros pack up what little belongings we possess and start all over. Although our location changes, who we are as a family never does. We have always managed to make the best out of every situation. I remember the first time our power went out in the house: my mother gave us each a candle, and we sat around the living room sharing family stories and laughing about our memories. From that day forward, every time we have lost electricity we come together and reminisce about the rosy candlelight. "When are we going to lose power again?" my siblings and I used to ask my parents. They would laugh and tell us how much they loved us; I am convinced that it is times such as those that keep a family together.

We have always worked with the scraps which we were given, and that is what has kept our bond strong. We never have much, but when we have something we cherish every ounce of it. Times truly hit rock bottom after we moved back to Connecticut. There were ten of us, including our dog and cat, packed into my grandmother's two-bedroom house: you can only imagine the memories which were made. My uncle lived in the attic, and none of us dared to go into the moldy, smelly, unfinished basement. There was no room for us on the bed, so every night my brother Daniel and I would find a nice warm spot on the living-room floor and attempted to fall asleep. After a month passed we made up our minds that something had to be done, so in attempt for an inch of privacy, and a room we could dub our own, we finally decided to move into the basement. In the basements there were no walls, just a frame; it was dark and rancid, and the
